It's important that donations are made to a variety of these campaigns because while all are in the general area of the campsite and do communicate, the different campaigns don't always or can't always share different resources. Grab a group of friends, make strips of paper, and shuffle to make donations.

It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

Dear @Starbucks - please make an express lane for your professional customers. There's no reason I should have to wait 45 minutes while one barista cranks out 15 triple Carmel half cap frap low fat whip whatever the fuck monstrosities when all I ordered was a cold brew, black 🤦‍♀️

this is so fucking funny like if u want ur drink earlier then come earlier dumb ass

manic

johlyne
if their coffee order is so simple maybe they should just make it themselves at home djshahsdjk that would be the smart thing to do instead of insulting starbucks on twitter cause someone ordered a caramel frappe and u got all in ur feels about it

That's a cheaper drink, too. 'Hey company, you should prioritize me because I spend less money at your establishment and feel superior to customers who order what your company is most known for' Not likely to make much headway

But you'd think first maybe they'd be like 'hey the workers are overtaxed and there should be another worker to take the strain off and make it go faster', first, too.

aleshakills Follow

If there's only one barista, who's running the express line?

madqueensarah Follow

Also, there kind of is an 'express' lane? It's available to nice regular customers.

Genuinely. I learn the baristas' names (they've all got name tags, it's not hard), smile, if there's no queue and they're not super busy I'll ask about how they're doing, compliment the coffees ("Yeeeeah Eliza makes awesome lattes!"), and the only complaint I've ever made was: "Hey, er, there's no caramel syrup in this." "Oh! I'll make you a new one." "Can you just put the syrup in the top?" "That's not how we make it. It'll taste different." "Babe it's coffee I don't care."

If the person on the bar doesn't have a line of drinks to make, mine starts getting made the second I walk in. If there's a queue because there's one person at the counter who hasn't decided what they want, I get handed my coffee before I even ask for it. They've purposefully gone through the cups to get me a 'winner'. They've given me a month's worth of 'free coffee' vouchers, meant for their 100th customer of the year but the 8 people in before me weren't polite. There was even one specific barista who charged me for small lattes, whilst making me large caramel lattes because she was proving her point that their chain were nicer than a competing chain.

Just be nice, and you'll have less stuff to complain about. People generally want to help, don't give them a reason not to.

the-notsoevil-queen

Another note, Starbucks has an app that you can use to preorder your drink and come pick it up, it'll be already done and waiting for you when you walk in the door. THAT is the express lane, and if dipshit chose to stand in a 45 minute line for his 4 dollar half coffee half ice he's not just wrong, he's stupid.

Raoul Julia had a lot of fun as M. Bison in the Street Fighter movie. When it was over he was genuinely surprised to learn that it was not, in fact, intended to be a comedy. ("Then why did they cast ME?")

Michael Caine told the director of Muppet Christmas Carol that he wasn't going to acknowledge the muppetness, and as far as he was concerned he was in a Royal Shakespeare Theatre Production. The director said "Yes, that's why we cast you."

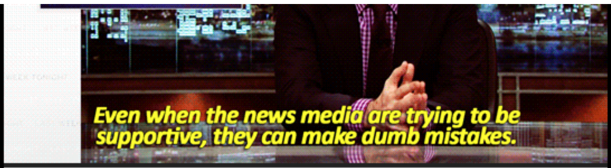
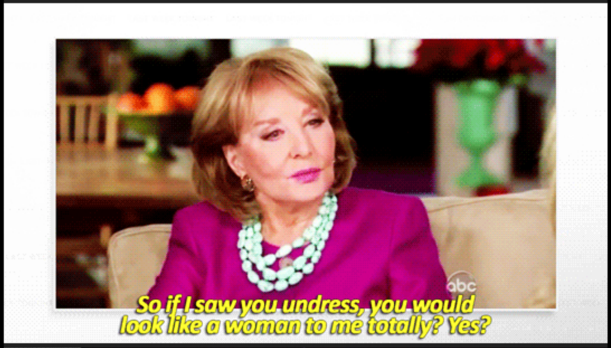
For all the strides transgender people have made lately, let's not get too complacent about how far we've come because they still face a host of obstacles.



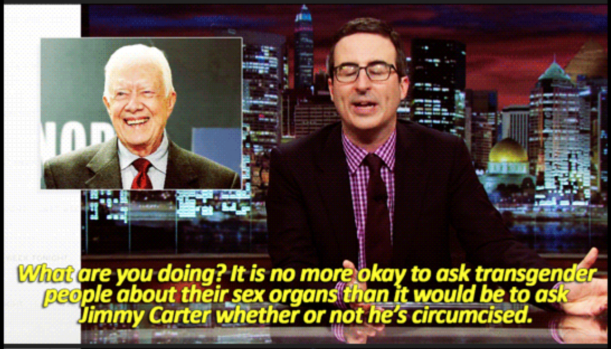
Even when the news media are trying to be supportive, they can make dumb mistakes.

You private parts are different now, aren't they?

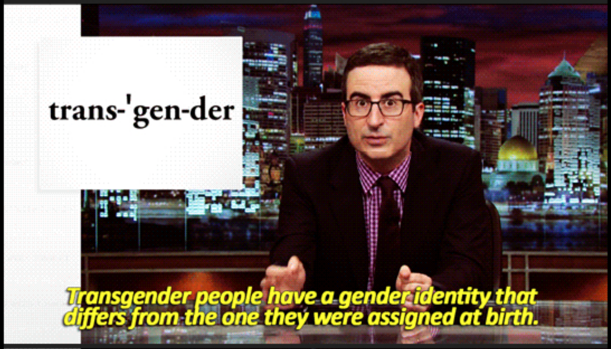
I don't want to talk about it because it's really personal.



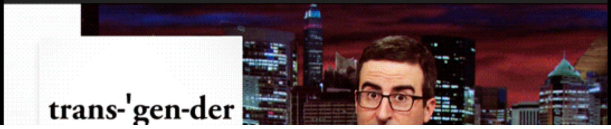
So if I saw you undress, you would look like a woman to me totally? Yes?

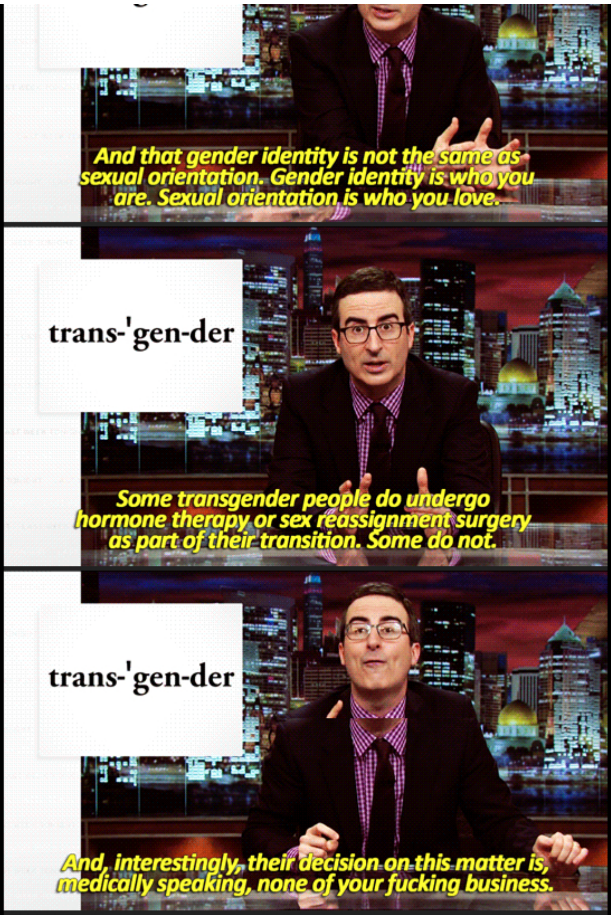


What are you doing? It is no more okay to ask transgender people about their sex organs than it would be to ask Jimmy Carter whether or not he's circumcised.



Transgender people have a gender identity that differs from the one they were assigned at birth.





And that gender identity is not the same as sexual orientation. Gender identity is who you are. Sexual orientation is who you love.
trans-'gen-der
Some transgender people do undergo hormone therapy or sex reassignment surgery as part of their transition. Some do not.
trans-'gen-der
And, interestingly, their decision on this matter is, medically speaking, none of your fucking business.

I kind of love that one of Jane Austen's biggest fans was the Prince Regent (later George IV). She didn't think very well of the nobility in general, but she motherfucking hated him, a wastrel who very flagrantly cheated on his wife.

But he loved her writing, was the first recorded purchaser of Sense and Sensibility, and kept copies of her books in all his residences. She never made enough from her writing to live on during her lifetime, so this wasn't support she could casually toss aside. His librarian kept suggesting ideas for new books to her, which she turned down with exquisite politeness. Much to her aggravation, she found herself obliged to dedicate Emma to the man.

Loki was always an agent of chaos. Its like one of his many nicknames. Now even that was given to someone else. Don't tell me Marvel doesnt do him dirty.

bifrostedflake

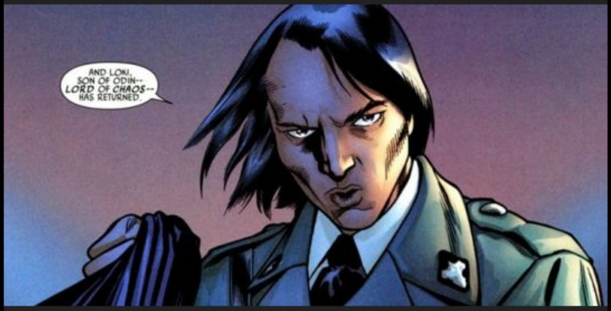
I'm sorry but I don't agree with this. Nothing has been taken from Loki. Nobody has come out and said, Loki is no longer an agent of chaos. Absolutely nobody has said this. Loki doesn't have to use chaos magic like Wanda to be considered an agent of Chaos. Loki will always be this, but it's okay for another character to be a force of chaos too.

Wanda, in the comics, has canonically wielded chaos magic for a long while. It's part of her story.

allaboutloki

Another so called Loki fan who is ok with others gaining more and more powers while he runs like fool with knives.

Loki literally calls himself that in comics.



AND LOKI, SON OF ODIN-- LORD OF CHAOS-- HAS RETURNED.

bifrostedflake

Everyone is allowed to express their opinions and it doesn't make them any less of fan.

I'm mad about the way his powers are nerfed in the movies too. I'm mad about the knives too and the way his character has been handled overall. But, I'm not about to start crapping on other characters who are finally getting their due while I wait for the character I wanna see most finally get theirs.

chaoticnebu Follow adding my 2 cents, mcu has started to introduce the concept of magic just now. for 10 years loki, thor, and all asgardians where nothing more than “aliens” accidentally worshipped as gods by norse civilizations. magic was “““just science””” and wanda could just use psychokinesis and telepathy

now mcu’s writing is FINALLY becoming more similar its earth-616 counterpart and i’m pretty sure loki will be soon given what he’s due as much as wanda is, and become an actual reality-altering god

bifrostedflake

Yah! You hit the nail @chaoticnebu

And if they don’t deliver with the Loki show, I think we’ll all explode.

worstloki

We will definitely all explode.

Especially since bigger names are coming in and “magic” has become more relevant and possible to easily elaborate on.

PSA: if you or someone nearby are being brutalized by a police Spot robot and can get a hand or something underneath, grab this handle and yank it forward. This releases the battery, instantly disabling the robot.

Keep your hands away from joints, Spot WILL crush your fingers.

If you are a bystander and can get BEHIND spot, don't hit the power button, hit the OTHER button - it physically disconnects the motors.

Spot can also be countered with booby traps easily.

If you're armed, shoot center-of-mass as normal. The lithium pack is huge and not armored

POWER PORT & COVER
RED LIGHT OFF: Motor lockout engaged.

The lockout button mechanically disconnects the motor power and can only be activated by manually pressing the lockout button. Software cannot turn on the motors while the lockout is engaged.

To handle Spot safely, the robot must be placed in lockout mode. To enable lockout:

1. Turn motor power off with the controller.
2. Push the lockout button.
3. Confirm red light is off.

Spot has a handle at each hip joint. Use these to lift, carry, and roll the robot. When using the handles, always make a fist with each hand.

CAUTION: To avoid pinch points, never carry Spot with fingers extended.

Slippery surfaces	Spot has difficulty walking, and may fall, on slippery surfaces. This includes surfaces made slippery by sand, dust, and liquids, for example.
Cords	Spot cannot detect when its legs are entangled in cords, which may cause it to trip and fall. The entagled cord and anything connected to it may also be damaged.
Unstable objects shorter than 30 cm	Spot may not automatically avoid unstable objects that are fully or partially less than 30 cm above the ground, such as human feet and backpacks, and may fall upon stepping on such objects.
Transparent, mirrored, or very bright obstacles	These can confuse Spot's obstacle detection system.
Moving surfaces	Spot can become unstable on moving surfaces, such as elevators, escalators, moving walkways and ramps, vehicles, or boats. Put robot in lockout mode when transporting on moving platform.

Han has a good laugh when Luke tries to block laser blasts with his visor down in Hope.

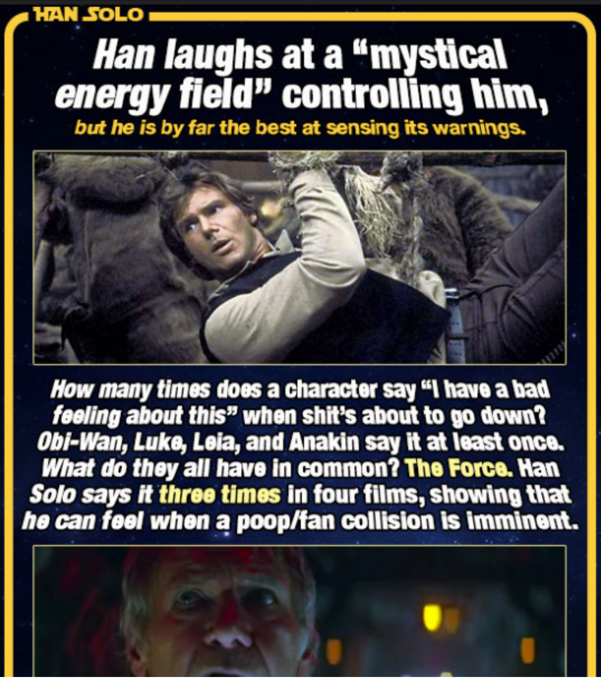
"I call it luck."

Luck ... like in Jedi when Han shoots the Sarlacc's tentacle dead center, while upside-down. Oh, and blind. Nope, that's not the Force at all.

Must be more of that "luck."

CRACKED.COM

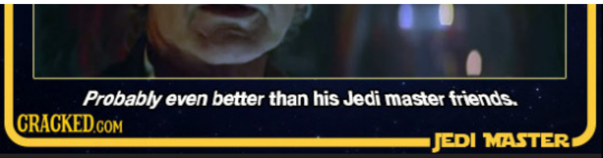
JEDI MASTER



HAN SOLO

Han laughs at a "mystical energy field" controlling him, but he is by far the best at sensing its warnings.

How many times does a character say "I have a bad feeling about this" when shit's about to go down? Obi-Wan, Luke, Leia, and Anakin say it at least once. What do they all have in common? The Force. Han Solo says it three times in four films, showing that he can feel when a poop/fan collision is imminent.



Probably even better than his Jedi master friends.

Solo has been flying for years, so he doesn't need Jedi-like reflexes to get to where he's going.

Unless he steers into an ultra-dense asteroid field, where C-3PO tells him the odds of navigating it successfully are 3,720 to 1. Yet they survive.

Most of the Empire's lifelong pilots, using much smaller, more maneuverable ships, aren't so "lucky."

[12 Times Han Solo Used The Force Without Knowing It]

spatscolombo Follow

I need Han to accidentally be force strong, mostly because HE WOULD HATE THAT SO MUCH "Wow so you're basically a self-taught Jedi" "WHAT-ARE YOU-I'M THE BEST PILOT IN–" "That's force shit" "I'M AN EXCELLENT SHOT" "Yeah, because of the force" "I'M INCREDIBLY PERSUASIVE" "That's the force making people believe your terrible lies against all reason " "I'LL SEE YOU IN HELL"

tehnakki Follow

God, he'd be SO MAD. Just hanging out with the other force ghosts and so goddamned bitter about it.

And I want Anakin to be weirdly angry about Han breaking up with Leia, because she was the best thing that ever happened to him and Han still 100% not being over that he is VADER and tortured both of them. Oh oh no, I think I am developing Force Ghost headcanons.

copperbadge Follow

I would watch and enjoy a movie about Han Solo leading a force ghost heist of some kind, complaining angrily the entire time. None of the movie characters who have become force ghosts were known for their ability to give a solitary fuck, and the bickering would be spectacular. Yoda making puns about how he can see right through people. Han claiming Obi Wan still owes him money. The fuck are you going to do with money in the afterlife, Solo? I'm gonna roll it up into A STICK AND BEAT YOU WITH IT SO HARD YOUR SON FEELS IT THROUGH THE FORCE, SKYWALKER. Obi Wan immediately hands him ten force ghost star wars dollars.

Stormtroopers constantly walking through them. At one point they recruit a force sensitive storm trooper they discover when she asks them if they can keep the petty bitching to a dull roar. She's been there the whole time but hates her job so she just kept quiet about all the force yelling in the Death Star mark XXIV control room until now.

If you have more customers than your employees can handle and you're still not making enough, then you need to sort out your finances. Raise prices if necessary.

Listen. If you cannot afford to pay all your employees a living wage and employ a number of people equal to the workload, then you are bad at business management and should consider exploring other career paths. Such as being a cashier.

jumpingjacktrash Follow

y’all might be thinking that small businesses would get the short end here. but the thing is, all the small businesses i’ve ever worked for or been involved with, when they didn’t have enough employees to cover the time, the owner worked it themselves, or they closed early/opened late.

the places that consistently shortstaff are big franchises, especially fast food chains. they prey on desperate workers who can’t afford to say no, and use them up like they’re disposable. it’s disgusting and it should be as illegal as hiring 9 year olds or holding paychecks hostage.

The synopsis reads, "Nick Carraway meets his mysterious neighbor, Jay Gatsby. Gatsby doesn't seem to eat anything, and has an aversion to silver, garlic, and the sun, but good friends are hard to come by. Especially an interesting millionaire like Gatsby.

When Gatsby asks Nick to help catch a murderer, Nick just can't say no. And, of course, Nick agrees to set up a tea date for his cousin Daisy and Gatsby. It's harmless to reunite two old friends; until Nick realizes the truth he's known, deep down, the entire time.

Jay Gatsby is a vampire."

COMPLIMENTING PEOPLE ON SOMETHING OBVIOUSLY DIFFERENT

21. Stretching post workout directly in a male onlooker's line of sight, as if she's a former dancer who's very dedicated to her flexibility or something.

22. Taking her shirt off mid workout instead of starting off in just a sports bra so she can put on a little strip show at the gym for anyone watching.

EXERCISING

31. Licking her lips more sensually than necessary when eating something sticky because she knows she's being watched by a random guy.

32. Devouring a popsicle in public in such a way that any man who notices will automatically imagine her giving them a blowjob.

EATING IN PUBLIC

and my PERSONAL favourite:

9. Letting a guy she interacts with ever so briefly on the bus or in an elevator believe that he's got a shot for a few precious seconds before getting on with her day.

34 Ways Your Girlfriend Is Micro-Cheating (And Totally Getting Away With It)

Author's Note: The purpose of this article was always to entertain. It is satire, written in jest because I found the whole "micro-cheating" phenomenon to be totally absurd when it started trending years ago.

1. Leaving the house looking especially hot right after a fight just to emphasize how much her significant other has to lose if he doesn't clean up his act and apologize stat.

this post is mean and I never read divergent or whatever the fuck but 1984 sucks and is rape apologism so if somebody wanted to write about divergent or whatever good for them

westenra Follow

this reply is like literally exactly what op is talking about lol. like firstly ops point isn't "1984 is good", ops point is that analysing complex stories teaches you how to form opinions and think for yourself. and like secondly in 1984 you're supposed to think damn it's fucked up that he's thinking that way about her, i wonder if this ties in with the central theme of "a society like this will fuck you in the head"? (this is the thinking for yourself part). like do you think orwell just put that in for fun? do you think that just because winston is the protagonist you're supposed to agree with everything he does?

lunaescribe Follow

You know I feel like this post just gave me an epiphany for what is wrong with how Tumblr Fandom/Internet Fandom responds to media-or not wrong but makes it very hard to respond to anything but a morally correct, and heroic protagonist.

When an English teacher, or reader, taught or picked up 1984, it wasn't with the intention they were going to love the protagonist. They picked it up with the intention of reading a whole story and trying to grasp the theme or catharsis from the story. If the protagonist was a shitty person it played into the the themes or the story, because it wasn't about morally judging the book or liking or feeling attachment to the protagonist. Sometimes and often times, books were just about gaining another perspective.

No one read Lolita expecting to endear, or like, or be inspired by Humbert. You are supposed to be upset by his behavior, you don't read Lolita with the intention of being inspired. You read it to learn more about what the fuck is going on inside someone's head when they behave like that. How children get sucked into abusive situations. Or read "The Great Gatsby" not because they want to fall in love with Gatsby or Nick, but to better understand and analyze the experience of the 1920s or destitution of the American Dream.

A lot of internet and fandom culture has changed that though. When we say something like "I love the Great Gatsby" it comes with the idea or association that means you must love or relate to one of the characters. And maybe you do, but the first assumption is not longer about the quality of the work or themes, or cathartic impact-it's about character admiration. And with that character admiration, in tumblr stan culture, or kin culture, or exalting characters with fanart/romance/so on you don't just 'admire' or find that character 'compelling' it now translates to 'you LOVE that character' or you 'DIRECTLY relate to that character.'

You can't say "I love how Humbert is written, it's so fascinating and dark", without it directly translating you somehow relate to a child abuser or condone his actions. Taking in media has become an act of worship and connection. We no longer watch meant to just see the story as a whole, we watch expecting to connect to a character and if we offer them our "worship" as it's become, as opposed to just attention or interest study as it traditionally was, it means we are condoning the character or saying we directly empathize with all their actions.

I think that's why there is often now so much fuss over toxic characters or not. Or whether that classical novel is showing good or bad things anymore. We're treating the characters as people we should love or want to draw or write about. Sometimes a story is just about getting the the theme or catharsis or learning another perspective. We don't NEED to like the character. Or we don't HAVE to like a character to be impressed by how they're written or intrigued by their behavior.

I think if internet culture could learn to view stories as small insights into other lives or single takes of one perspective instead of purposeful moral inspirations we'd be a lot less worried about how toxic or not toxic they are.

Auschwitz Is Not a Metaphor

The new exhibition at the Museum of Jewish Heritage gets everything right—and fixes nothing.

WWW.THEATLANTIC.COM | DARA HORN

"...dead Jews are only worth discussing if they are part of something bigger, something more. Some other people might go to Holocaust museums to feel sad, and then to feel proud of themselves for feeling sad. They will have learned something important, discovered a fancy metaphor for the limits of Western civilization. The problem is that for us, dead Jews aren't a metaphor, but rather actual people we do not want our children to become."

jewish-privilege Follow

"The audio guide humbly speculates about who these people might have been: "She might have been a housewife or a factory worker or a musician ..." The idea isn't subtle: This woman could be you. But to make her you, we have to deny that she was actually herself. These musings turn people into metaphors, and it slowly becomes clear to me that this is the goal. Despite doing absolutely everything right, this exhibition is not that different from "Human Bodies," full of dead people pressed into service to teach us something.

"At the end of the show, onscreen survivors talk in a loop about how people need to love one another. While listening to this, it occurs to me that I have never read survivor literature in Yiddish—the language spoken by 80 percent of victims—suggesting this idea. In Yiddish, speaking only to other Jews, survivors talk about their murdered families, about their destroyed centuries-old communities, about Jewish national independence, about Jewish history, about self-defense, and on rare occasions, about vengeance. Love rarely comes up; why would it? But it comes up here, in this for-profit exhibition. Here is the ultimate message, the final solution.

"That the Holocaust drives home the importance of love is an idea, like the idea that Holocaust education prevents anti-Semitism, that seems entirely unobjectionable. It is entirely objectionable. The Holocaust didn't happen because of a lack of love. It happened because entire societies abdicated responsibility for their own problems, and instead blamed them on the people who represented—have always represented, since they first introduced the idea of commandedness to the world—the thing they were most afraid of: responsibility.

"Then as now, Jews were cast in the role of civilization's nagging mothers, loathed in life and loved only once they are safely dead. In the years since I walked through Auschwitz at 15, I have become a nagging mother. And I find myself furious, being lectured by this exhibition about love—as if the murder of millions of people was actually a morality play, a bumper sticker, a metaphor. I do not want my children to be someone else's metaphor. (Of course, they already are.)"

15-hour work week

Ok, but yeah. I want to work more than 15 hours a week. I genuinely love the challenge with what I do. 15 seems, oddly tiny? Where did this number come from?

@abcoconut then work more hours, you wouldn't be FORCED to work under 20 hours, the 15 hours is a guideline. No one should HAVE to work more to survive. Honestly no one should have to work at ALL just to make rent and food

This is a good response to that question, in case anyone wanted the q&a paired together. 15 would be the social average — some people might work more, some less, but that would be up to them. This is also presupposing a change in the way the economy effectively functions, in the sense that 15 hours would be the social average for necessary labor, and after that point you'd probably see tons of people participating in "unnecessary" labor out of interest. There's an idea in socialist theory that basically says once you reach a point far enough along after capitalism you'd just start seeing a blurring of the lines between what's defined as "work" (or as "a job") and what's defined as "a collective activity", especially with regard to the arts, science, etc.

At the very least, a transition towards (eco)socialism will require a vast shortening of the workweek and a reduction in overall advertising/consumption, whether that mean a 15-hour week or a 20-hour week. The main point is that people are overworked, we can meet everyone's needs feasibly with less hours anyway, and the over-emphasis on extraction and accumulation (which is in part fueled by a tediously long workweek) is having disastrous effects on the planet. We can both accomodate the needs of the planet AND expand the political horizons for the great majority of the population, but it will require the fundamental defeat of capitalism and the establishment of a new ecological workers' democracy. It's a big project, but so worth it in the long run.

What could a person possibly do for 15 hours a week that would warrant enough pay to live off of? 40 hours a week is completely reasonable and if you were like the rest of us you'd be fighting to get more hours. Not all of us have parents to fallback on cause we don't wanna put in a full weeks work

The 15-hour week presupposes a change in the economy first. Obviously capitalism requires long hours for people to survive, but in terms of pure stats it's not necessary for society to be working that much. There's enough resources for everyone, and so much work is pointless bullshit that only exists to line the pockets of the rich. The ecosocialist project demands a new way of looking at and distributing work. Get rid of the bullshit jobs, divvy up the necessary jobs, and we'd free up people's time immensely to engage in pursuits they actually want to do to contribute to society.

Also, food and housing and such would be guaranteed in an ecosocialist society anyway, so it goes beyond simply reorganizing work. People have a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and those will never be achieved for the great majority in a capitalist society.

If people are wondering where the numbers come from, think about all the redundant and pointless jobs that would be eliminated once capitalism is gone. The entire insurance industry would be gone. Large swathes of manufacturing making identical products with different labels, gone. Finance sector, gone. Wasteful R&amp;D on competing products instead of just everyone working to make the single best product they can, that's gone too. Planned obsolescence? Gone.

marbleflakes
The more durable and functional you can make a product, the less you have to make it, the fewer hours we have to spend a week making the product, which would be passed down to the worker instead of up to the CEO. Instead of making sure that everyone has to buy a new washer and dryer every 10 years, you make one that people almost never have to replace. Same with cars. Same with electronics. You wouldn't have to gather as many materials, or as much time remaking product.

Under a communist/ecosocialist/ really any left-wing economic structure, any improvements in a product or service that reduces the amount you need to make, or reduces the time in which it takes to manufacture, is more time you get to spend not working. Do you wanna work 30 hours making these things? Cool! That means someone who wants to devote their entire time to developing entertainment for you when you get home doesn't have to interrupt that work anymore. Win/Win.

These were really good additions so I wanted t add them onto the cumulative post the whole point of capitalism is to maximize both the demand and the supply for a product, in many cases creating new avenues of consumption and production that didn’t exist prior. Huge amounts of resources and time are used up to synthesize unnecessary activities and products. Simplicity is the sharpest knife.

The reason you want more hours is because the hours you’re working don’t pay you enough to live off. Even in a less radical change in a closer future should mean more pay for less hours so you don’t need to sleep in your car between 12 hour shifts at an Amazon warehouse because you don’t have enough money to eat and afford rent.

Can attest. Mentally, my happiest work weeks are the ones where I work a 5hr shift, 4 days a week. If I could sustain that without fear of its impact on my finances, I absolutely would. For my job, that’s exactly enough time to do a fair share of the baking work, clean up after myself, and go home. That model fits the 8/8/8 more realistically, as I spent 2hrs before work getting ready (waking up, eating, travel, etc) and 1hr after traveling home and decompressing. 8hrs of my day dedicated to my job, which brings food to my community. On weeks like that, I feel most able to dedicate time to rest, leisure, my hobby job (writing), and my house and relationship. 20hrs a week, tops. Perfect

crypid-typal Follow

This 100%. As someone who is disabled and unlikely to be able to ever work a 40hr work week, this would be heaven. I have skills, skills that could be utilized to help make and maintain a functional society. But capitalism demands that I overextend myself to get new, less useful skills so the rich can make more money.

So many people would be HAPPY to do “”bad”” jobs if they weren’t treated like shit doing it and being forced to endure it.

My dad's favourite film, Chariots of Fire.
Ian Charleson, who plays Eric Liddell, he says to his wife...
[puts on Scottish accent]
"I believe God made me for a purpose"
"But he also made me fast."
"And when I run I feel his pleasure."

> I'm a runner. I love running. It's a... I use it to keep fit, but I also use it to stay awake. By which I mean... it's a chance to be alone with your thoughts, and I can work stuff out. [x]
